Complete Dental Care

By: Dr. Michael A. Wong

Even with all the attention that cosmetic dentistry has attracted from shows such as Extreme Makeover and the Swan, basic restorative and preventative care is still the major emphasis of most practices, including ours. Though we are experienced and enjoy giving people beautiful smiles, conservative general dentistry remains a large part of our practice. That does not mean that we use older techniques like silver mercury fillings or stainless steel crowns. Today modern dentistry allows us to fix cavities and broken teeth with less drilling and have them look like natural teeth. Metal-free dentistry is now the "state of the art". Amalgam (silver mercury) fillings have been shown to weaken teeth over time due to their expansion and contraction with temperature changes. Those fillings generally contain 40-50% mercury and combined with chewing forces can cause fractures and breakage in teeth. Luckily using the latest materials along with bonding, we can now strengthen teeth with conservative and long lasting procedures. Ask us if the latest in modern dentistry would be good for you.
